New Mexico invests $1.9 million to expand youth outdoor access
Outdoor Equity Fund connects over 22,000 youth to outdoor programs

SANTA FE— A $1.9 million investment through the state’s Outdoor Equity Fund will connect over 22,000 youth across 14 counties to 62 programs that promote wellness and expand outdoor access.

Applications for overall FY26 funding surged 141% over the previous year, with 228 organizations requesting $7.8 million in funding against $4 million available.

“This state investment in our youth is amplified by nearly $2 million in matching funds from recipients,” said EDD Cabinet Secretary Rob Black. “These programs help prepare the next generation with the skills and experiences needed to expand New Mexico’s growing outdoor recreation industry.”

Half of the awarded programs serve youth in rural and Tribal communities. Thirty-four programs include workforce development components, and 23 programs offer paid opportunities for participants.

“These investments open doors for young people across New Mexico, connecting them to the outdoors, their communities, and future opportunities,” said Outdoor Recreation Division Director Karina Armijo.

“Outdoor Equity Fund support will allow us to provide important outdoor-based digital-detox experiences, helping our community’s children establish different relationships with technology and the outdoors,” said Sandy Campbell, True Kids 1 Executive Director.

Since Governor Michelle Lujan Grisham established the Outdoor Recreation Division and Outdoor Equity Fund in 2019, ORD has awarded more than $10.5 million in grants, connecting 128,000 youth to outdoor education experiences. New Mexico’s Outdoor Equity Fund was the first state grant program in the nation designed to expand equitable access to outdoor opportunities for youth, particularly from low-income and underserved communities.

The next round of Outdoor Equity Fund applications will open July 1, 2026, with a second round opening in February 2027. View the full list of awardees and project descriptions at www.nmoutside.com/news.

The Outdoor Equity Fund is administered by the Outdoor Recreation division of the New Mexico Economic Development Department.
